

Who can see this?

Konstanz to Schaffhausen today and then on a little way to see the Rhine Falls before coming back here for the night. Falls were the most spectacular sight of the trip so far. Apparently the average flow in the summer is 600 cubic metres per second. Bruce braved the boat trip out to a little island (rock with viewing platform) in the middle of the falls but I, wimpily, stayed on the bank. On our way here we crossed the German-Swiss border at least five times. The first crossing in Konstanz was at a very formal customs and border control point with slightly scary guards in uniform. The crossings then became decreasingly formal until I was not even sure where the last couple of crossings were precisely. We did cycle through Büsingen, which is in a German enclave entirely surrounded by Switzerland. The border round here is very confusing. Here is a picture for Helen and the Bikeability crew of Bruce with his hired bike at one of the border crossings on an unsurfaced path in the woods. Zurich tomorrow!
